Rev. Amos Brown of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People praised the decision to use outside judges on the task force as a serious effort for seeking transparency. He slammed the “demeaning” text messages sent by police officers, saying it fits in with a pattern of black people being treated poorly in the city, as blacks make up a large percentage of inmates despite making up a small portion of the population. He said the task force gives him hope that justice will be served.
