Design problems, labor strikes and other issues delayed the Dreamliner's debut. Then there were the overheating batteries that caused regulators to ground the worldwide fleet in 2013 until Boeing came up with a fix. Just last week, U.S. officials directed airlines to shut down the planes' electrical systems every few months to prevent a total loss of power. And Boeing's accumulated costs to build the plane have ballooned to $27 billion.

Get rolling and the six-speed manual is incredibly slick, and the EcoBoost engine pulls smoothly from low revs, taking care of commuter-style driving with ease. Prod the throttle harder and it will gather pace in a pretty grown-up way, with a sound subtly augmented through the speakers. It might not get close to matching the V8 for sheer excitement or authenticity, but it's a pulsing resonance which conveys a sense of power and engineers spent many hours tuning it for the right feel.

The team thinks it is more likely that the spiders ingested or absorbed the water with the carbon-based materials and then incorporated it into the fibers. The presence of the nanomaterials in the center of each fiber supported this hypothesis. The team simulated the molecular structure that resulted from the sprayed spiders, and say that the mechanical properties they produced were in line with the silk produced in the experiment.

Only if it doesn't disrupt other people. If you are listening to music on headphones you'll need to remove them when being addressed by polling station staff. They will want to confirm your name and other details. If your personal music player is playing at high volume in the polling booth you'll be asked to turn it down or leave. The same goes for loud mobile phone conversations.
