"What we tend to mean when we talk about stress are the daily experiences of time scarcity, role uncertainty, social conflict and pressure – but these are exactly the kind of experiences which are critical for health and longevity. We know that having a meaningful job is protective to health; we know that social connection is protective; we know that mastery of challenge is protective. Having meaning is better for us than avoiding discomfort."

The dark, nearly invisible halo stretches about a million light-years from its host galaxy, halfway to our home galaxy, and is estimated to contain half the mass of the stars in the galaxy itself. It can be thought of as the "atmosphere" of a galaxy.

Clearly that is not the kind of message you want to be sending out when you are all supposed to be pulling them all together. Carver needs better support from those around him but the best thing he can do right now is to work with his players on the pitch. They need to be looking at how to win games rather than getting caught up in emotional rows.
