No wonder Ellie had her sights set on something impressive for her tooth-pulling. Her siblings have experimented with extraction methods like "floss attached to a helmet while one kid rode off on a scooter," a "Styrofoam airplane with floss", "bike and floss" and even floss attached to the family dog's collar.

"When you're pressing, you're certainly not as comfortable and confident on the ice as you are when things are going well," Stamkos said. "It's a little easier when the team is winning, it doesn't bother you as much. But when things aren't going well and you get a break to go your way, all of sudden your legs feel a little lighter, you feel a little more confident with the puck. Hopefully that's the case for me."
